Project Description: Ben Lomand Rural Telephone Cooperative desires to deploy their advanced high speed broadband network to the residents of the Palmer Mountain community in Grundy County, Tennessee and the Greentown community in Marion County, Tennessee. Grundy County, Tennessee has been designated by the USDA as a “Strike Force Persistent Poverty” county. Although the small communities of Palmer Mountain and Greentown are currently served by the Company’s copper network, the residents are limited in their service offerings due to the physical constraints inherent in the existing network only allowing data speeds of approximately 1.5Mbps downstream and 768 Kbps upstream. The communities are situated in the rugged terrain of a remote location approximately 20 miles from the nearest city. Through this project, residents will gain access to improved service at levels of up to 1 Gbps over the
The proposed Fiber-to-the-Premises network. Residents will also have access to broadband service, free of charge, at a new community center established as part of the project.
