A gorilla on the slopes? Not as far-fetched as it sounds.

Brownville, Maine company manufactures biobased lubricants for ski resorts and other recreational sites

National Biobased Products Day March 8, 2024

Stakeholder comments:

“Early in my career, I inspected public water supplies for the State of Connecticut and noticed an abundance of petroleum-based products polluting people’s water supply. This set me on a path to make a difference. When I became involved in the manufacturing world, there was no question that my goal would be to formulate top-quality biobased products that would outperform the standard petroleum products. I wanted to offer an environmentally friendly alternative that would pave the way for new standards.”

“My Mom and Dad, both WWII veterans, taught me well from an early age the importance of good health and clean living. I developed a great desire to learn about nature’s herbs and bounty and incorporate that knowledge into food, medicine, and homemade goods. When I began working alongside my parents in the manufacturing world, many long hours were spent incorporating historical methods and ways into our product development. This became a ‘natural’ blend and ethos that Scott and I share to this day.”

“We have an adventure park with zip lines. Our trolleys and carabiners can get wet or collect dust and start sticking. We've tried every brand of lubricant available at any hardware or building center. Gorilla Lube outperforms them hands down. The results are faster and last longer. For us, this is the best stuff evah!”

“I appreciate that the product is made of natural materials and locally manufactured. It effectively cleans the rails in our lift terminals, ensuring proper lubrication and ultimately extending the lifespan of our equipment.”
